What is a Development Permit?

A Development Permit provides permission for a specific type of development to take place on a parcel of land and ensures all regulations laid out in the Land Use Bylaw are met.

Development Permits are either issued as a permitted or discretionary use and based on the decision of the Development Officer, a variance to regulations may be given.

A Development Permit issued by the County will be required prior to applying for a Provincial Building Permit, which allows construction if the building complies with the Building Code.

When is a permit not required?

We recommend you contact the Planning Department for a definitive answer. Assuming all setback requirements and districting have been met, the following generally don't require a Development Permit:

- accessory buildings under 156 sq.ft
- fences shorter than 1.0m in front yards
- fences shorter than 2.0m in back yards
- landscaping activities that do not significantly affect grading and drainage on site
- repairs which don't increase total gross floor area
- signage smaller than 16 sq.ft
- advertisements smaller than 32 sq.ft
- Home-based child care for up to six (6) children
- general agricultural uses if the property is located within the Rural District
- mobile food sales
